Dreaming of a mother can convey maternal instincts. While dreaming about your father, you can reveal your authoritative instincts. But it also depends on the circumstances of your dreams. Another possibility is that you relive the event in your subconscious mind, whether happy or traumatized. It can be your brain's way of working through them and understanding them. 2. Dominique Mioseru performed at the 1996 Olympics as part of the 'Magnificent Seven' performance. As both business leaders and Olympic coaches know, you need more than exceptional talent to succeed. To create a winning team, entrepreneurs can learn from the great Olympians who come together to reach their full potential. Dominique Mioseru won Olympic gold in 1996 as part of the U.S. women's gymnastics team known as the Magnificent Seven. It was her first gold medal in U.S. women's gymnastics, an unrivaled feat until the Fab Five won gold in London last week. When the magnificent Seven was selected, it was a hedding group of outstanding gymnasts. Moceanu explains how they got together during training to create one of the most famous teams in U.S. Olympic history. By the time the Magnium Seven gathered, each of them had dreamed of winning Olympic gold for years. We had the same goal in mind. That gave us drive and dedication, Moceanu says, who recently wrote her memoir, Off Balance (Touchstone, 2012). We wanted to change gymnastics. The girls pushed each other out and increased their competitiveness. Moceanu recalls being calm yet aggressive, saying that if people can motivate and not stand up to each other, a little competitiveness can be good. Value the individual strengths of each employee. Because each person is an important member of your team, you need to help them recognize how best to support your group. Moceanu says it's important to nurture them along the way and make each person feel important. To do this, show each person how their strengths can bring the team up, so that their role and value become clear. Moomanu saw team-mate Dominique Dawes crying as the match began. [Our team captain Amanda Bowden] said right there, 'With this, you can do this.' Easy-to-use support from everyone, not just leaders, holds the team together when the pressure is on. Amanda was there for her. Maoseru remembers. That's what sportsmanship and teams are all about.
